PSA took the opportunity to highlight its core programs and projects that play a significant role in improving the lives of Filipinos. One of the main topics discussed was the ongoing implementation of the Philippine Identification System (PhilSys), a national ID program designed to simplify public transactions and ensure more inclusive access to government services. The agency also emphasized the importance of civil registration services, encouraging residents to register vital events such as births, marriages, and deaths.

SSS Dandy H. Fetalvero, PSA representative, provided guidance on how to avail of these services and the benefits of having accurate and up-to-date civil registry documents. “We are thankful for the chance to engage with the community through this initiative by PIA Romblon. It is important for us to bring our services to the grassroots level and ensure that residents are informed about the benefits of programs like PhilSys,” SSS Fetalvero cited. In addition to PhilSys and civil registration, he also discussed the PSA’s role in data collection and how its statistical reports support government planning and policy-making in areas such as health, education, and economic development.

Meanwhile, representatives from SSS, BFP, and PhilHealth also shared their respective programs. SSS focused on social security benefits and membership services, BFP discussed fire prevention and safety measures, and PhilHealth provided information on healthcare coverage and membership updates. Students, parents, and barangay officials who attended the event expressed their appreciation for the opportunity to learn more about government programs and services that directly impact their lives.

This quarterly forum is designated to introduce the mandate and services of PIA to the barangays, in collaboration with other partner government agencies.
